

The paper says Segei Kourdakov
was raised in an orphanage in Brest-Litovsk
and swam five hours to freedom
from a Russian fishing boat.

"The blond handsome and muscular young man
told reporters as he twirled a crucifix in his hand
'I do not believe in the fundamentals of communism.
While swimming I did not pray to Marx.

"'Just as behind this table there was a carpenter
It would seem this earth must have had a creator.
In Russia the young people believe in nothing.'"
He tells western revolutionaries it is in vain.

It breaks my heart brave man to say
in this country God's record ^{is} declassified,
and behind the elegant hype we discovered
just another vain carpenter.
